Basic Characteristics:

The Irish Terrier is a medium-sized, hardy, wiry-coated terrier breed. The head is long and flat, with a moderate stop and a slightly arched crown. The muzzle is strong and tapers slightly to a black nose. The teeth should meet in a scissors bite. The dark eyes are small, almond-shaped, and set well apart. The ears are small, V-shaped, and carried erect. The neck is long and muscular, leading to well-sprung ribs and a strong loin. The back is short and level. The tail is set high and carried gaily, but not over the back. The legs are straight and strong, with small, compact feet. The coat is hard, wiry, and dense, with a softer undercoat. It is red, wheaten, white, brindle, or black and tan in color.

Basic Needs:

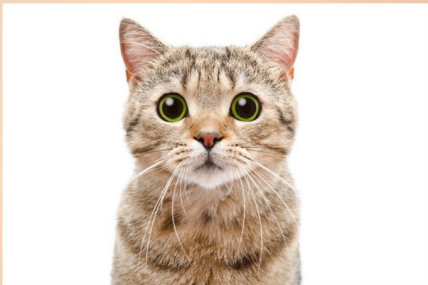

Some things you should know before adopting an Irish Terrier include: -Irish Terriers are high energy dogs that require a lot of exercise. -They are also very independent and stubborn, so patience is key when training them. -Irish Terriers are typically very good with children, but early socialization is still important. -They are also known for being barkers, so if you're looking for a quiet dog, an Irish Terrier is probably not the right fit.
